

The Office for Teaching and Learning presents The President's Award for Excellence in Teaching Speaker Series

John Corvino is an outstanding teacher in the Department of Philosophy whose primary field is ethics; his scholarship focuses most distinctively on the ethics of sexuality and the treatment of sexual minorities. He received the esteemed WSU President's Award for Excellence in Teaching in 2006.

Professor Corvino distinguishes himself as an exceptional instructor and is also a public intellectual who lectures regularly to general audiences, both on college campuses and in the wider community

John Corvino, PhD.
Assistant Professor, Philosophy

Tuesday,
November 7, 2006

12:00 – 1:30 pm

144 Purdy/Kresge Library
(Simons Room)

For the month of November, we're featuring Dr. John Corvino. John embodies a heuristic approach, giving his students the tools to further their own education as well as the materials necessary to make well-reasoned and informed ethical decisions. Showing students that philosophy and "real life" are inextricably linked, and that it is a student's ethical duty to acknowledge the link, is an important focus for Professor Corvino.

John is also a public intellectual who lectures regularly to general audiences, both on college campuses and in the wider community, Dr. Corvino has finely honed the art of breaking down complex concepts into their elements and introducing them in an orderly, manageable, and entertaining manner.

Come talk with John about his teaching methods and get some fresh ideas for your own course!

WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY

For further information, contact
Kristi Jordan at 577.6448
or email: af5315@wayne.edu

